“ It is being said that:
A man is not dead while his name is still spoken - that we are only truly gone when we disappear from the memories of those who loved us. Meaning a great artist never dies as long as his books are read, paintings admired and as long as his songs are sung we may each of us live forever.

Terry Pratchett

Lil Al will always remain alive in the memories of him in our hearts

“ Al singing War Pigs in his younger days always reminded me of Ozzy. To this day, I still think of Al when I hear that song. I'm sure I always will.

“ During our formative years in Detroit, I was fortunate enough to count Al among my good friends. He was kind, fiercely loyal, funny and one of the most talented musicians I'd ever met. He would do anything for his friends and family. In recent years we were able to reconnect and go golfing together. (and as I recall he beat me soundly...he had a mean swing, no doubt a byproduct of his West7 baseball days) I am so grateful we got to play that round.

Al was a very passionate person, and did not suffer fools gladly. He constantly sought justice in a seemingly unjust world. He was outspoken and relished a good debate. By all accounts Al Adams was an excellent husband, father, friend and human being. He will be deeply missed by all of us who loved him.

Rest easy brother.

“ One of my first and favorite memories of Al. When his Uncle Mike and I were first dating, Al spent a lot of time with us. One evening, we ordered pizza, and Al offered to come with me when I went to pick it up. At the time (early 1980s), I had frosted hair. We were in the car, he looked at me rather puzzled, and said "Jackie, why do you only have grey hair in those odd places?" Needless to say, when I told him I'd had that done and it wasn't natural, he looked at me like I was absolutely nuts. Al accepted me easily as part of his uncle's life, and I am so happy we became family. It breaks my heart to lose him at such a young age. To paraphrase another past eulogy, he had every gift but the gift of years.
