“ For a man like Angelo (uncle) a rhetorical R.I.P. is not enough.

Men like him, human beings like him, are not many (and in modern times even fewer).

There are many virtues that Angelo (uncle) had and with which he lived for himself but above all for others. And of which I feel honored to have been a direct witness.

Of these I want to remember and bear witness to those that I consider of greatest value and for which I believe Angelo (uncle) will be welcomed into Heaven.

Equanimity!

Rare was Angelo (uncle)'s ability to be fair, to not take sides prejudicially, to be able to recognize what or who was on the side of good or evil.

But above all to have no selfishness or reverential fear for anyone and to say openly where the good was and where the evil resided.

Many of us who follow Jesus Christ, forget or ignore that the first of the Christian virtues is "Justice" that walks alongside "Charity" (the latter understood as wanting and doing good for others). And Angelo put these virtues into practice every day of his life.

"Resilience" combined with "Sense of Family Duty": two virtues that lived together in Angelo.

Unimaginable for the majority of men today is the physical and mental strength that Angelo (uncle) put into facing the extreme conditions in which he had to work.

He accepted without ever complaining to work for decades in the most inhuman cold of winters or in the scorching heat of the Midwest summers.

His body was worn out day after day, year after year, but he never gave up.

And this not so much because he was a strong man, but because strong was what Angelo (uncle) had put first as the meaning of his entire existence: family!

All his days in life were dedicated to the well-being and progress of his family.

Nothing for himself, ever, but all his "earnings" were for his dear children Onorio and Caterina and his beloved wife Liliana.

He gave his existence to them.

For all these I believe my uncle Angelo is already in Heaven, among the righteous, the good-hearted, among the heroes of normal life.

With love, yours, Ermanno
