“ My dad and Delores' mom were siblings, making me her first cousin. I knew Delores as long as I can remember. She used to spend the night occasionally to my delight as a child. When she married Richard, they moved across the street from us on Drexel, having Kevin and Brock add to their family. Then they moved to a new house in New Baltimore. There she suffered through the death of her son, Brock and her husband, Richard. She helped me through her devotion to St. Theresa after the death of my son, Chris. She was very spiritual and asked for St Theresa's intercession often. She certainly worried when Kevin was so terribly ill and in a nursing home. I know she felt relieved when he finally was at peace just before last Christmas. Now that she has joined them, imagine the celebration she so earnestly earned in their reunion. May she rest in peace.
