“ Dear Grandpa, I am so sad that I was out of town for your funeral, but my sons/your great grandsons and I are planning an adventure to your grave instead (for cleanup and to place flowers). While there, I will share my favorite stories of you, including when you pretended to be my play doll while you would babysit me as a little girl: You even let me comb your hair and restyle your clothing to the taste of a seven year old. I loved when you would put on a 'oh no you don't" show for Grandma when we tried to sneak Town Club pops from your basement bar in Warren, then sneak us a pop to share when she wasn't looking. I still have every letter you ever wrote me, and these numerous correspondences (mostly while I lived out of state) remain precious to me. You will be missed but never forgotten. With love, Kerri

“ Dear Dad,

We had some fun times together especially when we went camping together with our girls and your brothers Joe and Tony with their families —so much laughter and many stories of your youth. You were the strongest person I’ll ever know. You never gave up or complain even in the hardest times. I just think about how none of us would be here without you. You’ve left a huge legacy for all of us. We love you and will miss you always.

Love,

Mary

“ Dad

I will always have great memories of our time together but one in particular was when we were on vacation driving through the desert when you spotted a cactus plant about 100 feet from the road. You stopped so you and mom could pick the fruit off the cactus. As you both approached the cactus, you found a rattle snake lying next to it and you both started running back to the car. I had never seen you run like that ever!

I am now going through the same health problems you had and hope to have the same toughness and courage you had.

Love you,

Angelo

“ Grandpa,
From a very early age, I knew that you and I were, in certain respects, reflections of each other. At first, I saw this in our mutual love of learning - especially of history. You and I are collectors and storytellers by nature. Looking back, though, I've started to understand something that I think you had been trying to impart on us: the importance of "legacy".
At the end of the day, all of these things and all of these stories we collect only matter because they are a memorial to those that have come before. They continually remind us of the triumphs and failures of our predecessors and show us how we can be better - that to look towards the future does not mean to turn your back on the past. It is your legacy, passed down through your stories and wisdom, that shall live on forever in our minds and our hearts.

“ Well Kid, I can't believe our time together here on earth is over. We sure made a lot of friends together on our many doctor visits didn't we? You were always ready with a smile and a joke for all of the doctors and nurses and there was never a quiet moment in the waiting room with all of the many stories of your adventures - both in Malta when growing up, travels to Canada and the US, New York, and your life in Detroit. I will miss your many "quizzes" on old movies and music and our bantering on politics.
I will always admire your strength and courage in the face of all your adversities. You showed me how to be tough when the going gets tough and I will never forget you.
Peace and Love-Cheryl

“ Dad, I can't even begin to tell you how much you will be missed, there are no words to explain the void I have in my life. I will miss our daily visits and lunch time chats when you would answer the phone "what's happening" because you knew it was me. You taught me to work hard for what you want, to be tough when need be, and to respect others. Dad, you fought the fight. You had such incredible pain to deal with, yet you kept your sense of humor. You had amazed your doctors with all that you dealt with. I will forever have you in my heart. I really do know and feel what its like to have a broken heart, because, mine is in a million pieces. I will never, never, ever forget you.

I hope and pray we will visit in my dreams...until then dad, I send you all my love. Forever missed !!

*Love Always,
Junna*
