“ I loved Frank because he was such a wonderful person. I loved listening to him- the way he spoke and the way he lit up when he told his terrific stories. He had the most wonderful tales of true life experiences of almost anyone I've known and he was fantastic at telling them. He was always so strong and vibrant. He made me feel important and that he cared about me and who I was. It broke my heart when he got so sick and frail. I hope he knows how much I'll always love and miss him. Frank Arendt was one of the truly great men and it was a privledge and pleasure to know him and to be his daughter-in-law.##imported-begin##Kelli Arendt##imported-end##

“ Frank Arendt is not only a great person with a loving heart he is my wonderful grandfather. He has watched me grow up and I have watched him grow old. We have always been close. He has taught me so much in my life. I remember on Saturdays we would wake up and do our exercises in the living room and then split a grapefruit covered in sugar, while watching C.N.N, or before we went to sleep, just sit back and watch an Atlanta Braves game and dunk gingersnap's in milk for hours, I never really understood the game, but I knew that I was with him and that's all that mattered to me. I will miss those times the most. He has always been filled with will power, which in turn teaches me that anything is possible, and for him it was. I know that we all will miss him. Although I am devastated with the lose, I know that he is much happier now, with no pain, he is a free bird. I love you grandpa with all my heart and soul and I wish you the best, forever with me, as I am forever with you.##imported-begin##Chelsey Arendt##imported-end##

“ In the morning there was a love story.
One that would last a life time, one that is written on our hearts.
And there was a house full of children,
And laughter
And I imagine that there was dancing and
Milk Trucks
And an old man making moonshine in the bathtub
(just a story I might have heard once or twice anyway)
And yes there where hard times,
But there was LOVE.
In the Afternoon as the warm sun shown brightly overhead
There where grandchildren
And Sewing machines
And Coffee with Grandma and Emma
There where trips to the Fruit Market
And broken yard sticks
(just because my brothers head was so hard)
And Bike rides
And Silver dollar pancakes
And the Indian Bridge
And of course there was still dancing, and stories, and laughter.
And yes there where still hard times
But even more so there was LOVE.
Late in the day as the sun began to settle in the sky
There where weddings
And we danced
And we laughed
And there was still time to say Natstrovia!
(though now we both could admit we didn't really know what it meant)
And there are Great Grandchildren
Like little lights in the window of his heart.
And yes there where hard times
And yes as it does in every day the sun eventually set
But there is still LOVE
And LOVE will always remain.

Thank you for a life time worth of love and memories.

I LOVE YOU GRANDPA FRANK- You where one real hep cat.##imported-begin##Hillary Brady##imported-end##
