“ Ron was a really good guy who would always help you out if you had a question or problem. Always on an even keel. Talked me into buying baseball card sets when my kids were born and always took great interest in his friends and family's sporting events.

R.I.P. Ron.

My condolences to Cathy and the kids (who are hardly kids now)

“ Ron and I spent many years together in 'CSD' (Computer Systems Development) department. We had many meetings on a variety of topics, projects, and technical programming languages, methodologies, and even corporate strategies that required creative design and competitive thinking.

He always was willing to "go out of his way", applying himself to assignments and challenging timeframes, which resulted in managements' recognition of his performance.

His energy level and friendly mannerisms, helped to make a pleasant work environment for fellow co-workers to deal with the 'ups and downs' of their daily responsibilities.

Ron was a person who enjoyed joking around, laughing and sometimes handling frustrations in stride. Over the years, the computer system dynamics made it very interesting to realize enhancements that were career growth advancements that he desired.

His personality blended well into the social life activities, that included quite a variety of sports and entertaining internal mix of workers, throughout the headquarters of thousands employees.

He was a dedicated family man, and even his wife and daughter were Kmart employees also, creating a togetherness that was important. In his later years, he started to have some significant health issues, and battled through with a determined effort best he could.

"GOD BLESS" this man/fella/guy that many will remember for his Kmart Days.
